In this laugh-out-loud personal journey , acclaimed author Meghan Daum explores the perils and pleasures of believing that only a house can make you whole. Meghan Daum is the author of Life Would Be Perfect If I Lived In That House, a personal chronicle of real estate addiction and obsessive fascination with houses, as well as the novel The Quality of Life Report and the essay collection My Misspent Youth. I was recently reading a review by book columnist Megan Power about a book entitled “Life Would Be Perfect If I lived in That House” (by Meghan Daum). So many of Daum’s phrases practically leaped from the page at me. Daum states that “A house is a physical manifestation of our ideal selves: we’re buying who we want to be”. Life Would Be Perfect If I Lived In That House. After an itinerant suburban childhood and countless moves as a grown-up—from New York City to Lincoln, Nebraska; from the Midwest to the West Coast and back—Meghan Daum was living in Los Angeles, single and in her mid-thirties, and devoting obscene amounts of her time not to her writing career...
